2010 Superlatives: The Best In NY Nightlife

This was a year of late nights. Memories were created at 4 a.m. that will last a lifetime or at least be talked about with friends until the next momentous occasion happens. And when it comes to New York nightlife, anything can happen, any night of the week. Below, we look back on some of our favorite spots, both new and old, to spend the bewitching hours of 2010.

Best Bar For Surprisingly Good (Non-Live) Music Uptown: Whiskey Park

As the name would imply, this bar has great whiskey. It also has a pool table and sports on the TVs. It's basically bro heaven. But look past the suits, and pay attention to your ears. They play surprisingly good indie rock, a strange phenomenon for a bar filled with bankers, located on the edge of Central Park. If you're looking for a place to lounge on a couch, have a nice (albeit expensive) drink, and hear some music you both like and can actually talk over, this is the place to go uptown.
